&lt;p&gt;Paki is a derogatory ethnic slur originating from the United Kingdom, typically directed towards people of Pakistani descent, though it&#127975; has also been used against those of other South Asian descent (such as Indians and Ben) Tj T* BT

&lt;p&gt;In the 21st century, some&#127975; younger British Pakistanis and other British South Asians have attempted to reclaim the word, thus drawing parallels to the LGBT&#127975; reclamation of the slur &quot;queer&quot; and the African American reclamation of the slur &quot;nigger&quot;.[7][17] Peterborough businessman Abdul Rahim, who produces&#127975; merchandise reclaiming the word, equates it to more socially accepted terms such as &quot;Aussie&quot; and &quot;Kiwi&quot;[7], saying that it is&#127975; more similar to them than it is to &quot;nigger&quot;[7], as it denotes a nationality and not a biological race.[17] However,&#127975; other British Pakistanis see use of the word as unacceptable even among members of their community, due to its historical&#127975; usage in a negative way.[7]&lt;/p&gt;

&lt;p&gt;Several scholars have compared Islamophobic street violence in the 2000s and 2010s to that of Paki-bashing&#127975; in the 1970s and 1980s.[13][19][20] Robert Lambert notes that a key difference is that, whereas the National Front and BNP&#127975; targeted all British South Asians (including Muslims, Hindus an) Tj T* BT

Lambert&#127975; also compares the media&#39;s role in fuelling &quot;Paki-bashing&quot; in the late 20th century to its role in fuelling Islamophobic sentiment&#127975; in the early 21st century.[13] Geddes notes that variations of the &quot;Paki&quot; racial slur are occasionally used by members of&#127975; the EDL.[19]&lt;/p&gt;
